O. , Supt. of Docs. , Congressional Sales Office, 2000. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44636302 Subject: Confidential communications -- Taxation -- United States. Excerpt: . . . 11 tion of each member, some use of the North American Industry Classification Sys-tem (NAICS) codes to sort revenues by general source might be used. The category in which the organization falls should then dictate the additional public disclosure. For a trade association composed almost entirely of corporate members from a given industry, ASAE suggests that the additional financial disclosure be confined to the volume of annual revenues and expenditures, and then to the magnitude of expenditures on legislative lobbying, regulatory lobbying, public relations to improve the industrys image, research of potential benefit to the economy, standards-setting to improve public safety, and all other areas of activity. For a 501 (c) (3) professional organization that does not solicit funds from the gen-eral public, and which receives little charitable contribution money, if any, the pub-lic inspection version of the Form 990 might be organized as follows: After the gen-eral description of the nature and sources of support, the public inspector should then be directed to the categories of expenditure to enhance the profession (continu-ing education programs, research, standards setting, lobbying, etc.) and the volume of expenditures for fundraising and administration. The overall volume of revenues and expenditures and the salaries of officers should be subject to disclosure pursu-ant to existing law, but the precise composition of the balance sheet and the dis-tribution of revenues between contributions, program fees and investment income should be given much lesser...
