TVTOST of the artists have sent in their works for this years public exhibition; and the hanging committee are busily employed in arranging them according to their respective merits. Having obtained admission to the gallery, we present our readers with an account of the most distinguished pieces. No. i, A full-length portrait of Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, by V. Melville, R. A. and A. S. S. His Lordship is drawn seated at his table, counting his money-bags, while one of his servants is seen silching the guineas, and trotting off with them to his banker. The outline is bold, but the colouring is coarse, and the light and shade are injudiciously contrasted. There is a palpable error in the costume, which is Caledonian, as is also the cast of his Lordships features. No. 2. A portrait of Alexander the Great, by Mr. Wellefley, R. A. The hero is not drawn, as we usually sind him represented, visiting the camp of Darius, or the temple of Jupiter Ammon, killing Clytus, or seasting and siring a town with Thais. He is mounted upon his favourite steed Bucephalus, capering and prancing over the Directors of a certain Company, who are sprawling under his seet, and crying out for mercy. At sirst glance, this painting has something the air of St. George and the Dragon; but, upon an attentive view, we recognise, in both the horse and the rider, a goeat deal...
