As a substitute for mother s milk my experience has led me to prefer modified cow s milk to any of the prepared foods. It is not enough to simply direct the attendant to mix so much milk and other ingredients together and give so much of it at such intervals, but she should be instructed to carefully examine every stool, and the moment any departure from normal occurs to report, for the condition of the stool is the most important indication as to the suitability of the food. If the stool is not exactly normal a search should be made for the cause and the food modified accordingly. In addition to the food infants should be given plenty of pure fresh water, an ounce or two being given occasionally between the nourishment periods. The personal hygiene does not receive the...
